Why Hire an Ex-offender?

Integrating ex-offenders into the workforce is a key element of growing the region's economy, making Philadelphia a safer city, reducing area poverty levels and inspiring prosperity.

All organizations whether they are private businesses or non-profits all want the same characteristics in their employees. They want them to be motivated, possess the skills needed to produce products, come to work on time each day, follow instructions, are eager to learn and who are enthusiastic about their employer.

Ex-offenders possess all of the above mentioned traits and are looking for employers to offer them the opportunity to prove themselves as dedicated workers.

Philadelphia Mayor Michael A. Nutter is committed to helping these individuals and assisting the businesses and non-profits that offer them chances to prove themselves. The City of Philadelphia wants to partner with the private and non-profit sectors to make the process of hiring these dedicated individuals as easy as possible.

The Mayor's Office of Reintegration Services for Ex-offenders (R.I.S.E.) is the lead agency in the City for the management of reintegration services for ex-offenders back into society. Each year thousands of ex-offenders are released from state, local and federal detention centers back into Philadelphia, making the successful reintegration of ex-offenders (juvenile and adult) the single most important workforce and public safety issue of our region. Two-thirds of these will commit new crimes and return to prison within 3 years without serious intervention. This creates a cycle of release and recidivism that is both devastating and costly to the city's economic growth, community and government resources.

Any individual who contacts R.I.S.E. seeking services is likely motivated. They want to break the revolving door of recidivism and remake their lives to become productive members of society. At R.I.S.E., they are assessed, and it is determined which of the partners can help them take that first step toward employment. R.I.S.E.'s partners range from transitional work organizations, placement agencies, job training centers, life coaches and others.

The job training and placement organizations working with R.I.S.E. help interested employers get what they need and save them time and money in the hiring process. To do this they take the time to find out first what employers' needs are, provide resume writing and interview coaching prior to sending an individual out on an interview. Once a hire occurs, R.I.S.E.'s partners continue to work with employers. If an employer or employee encounters any problems or concerns, they are there to assist and handle the problem.

“My Administration is committed to working with employers so ex-offenders can be integrated into the workforce. This Guide is intended to be a user friendly manual to assist businesses, non-profits, corporate funders and individuals providing them with the steps to take in order to participate in the Philadelphia Reentry Employment Program (PREP).”

Mayor Michael A. Nutter

History of the PREP

During the 2007 mayoral primary then candidate Michael A. Nutter pledged to make public safety a top priority for his Administration. Part of this commitment included working with Philadelphia's business community to integrate ex-offenders into the workforce to decrease recidivism.

After winning the democratic nomination in May 2007, even before securing the general election, Nutter began to make good on his commitment. He partnered with Philadelphia At-Large City Councilman W. Wilson Goode, Jr. on a piece of legislation titled the Philadelphia Reentry Employment Program or what came to commonly be known as PREP. This legislation created a tax credit for employers who hire ex-offenders.

In the spring of 2010 the Administration decided to evaluate PREP. For 2 and ½ years the Administration had been closely watching, listening and learning from the business community and members of the Administration on the frontlines of this issue on ways PREP can be made more streamlined and accessible.

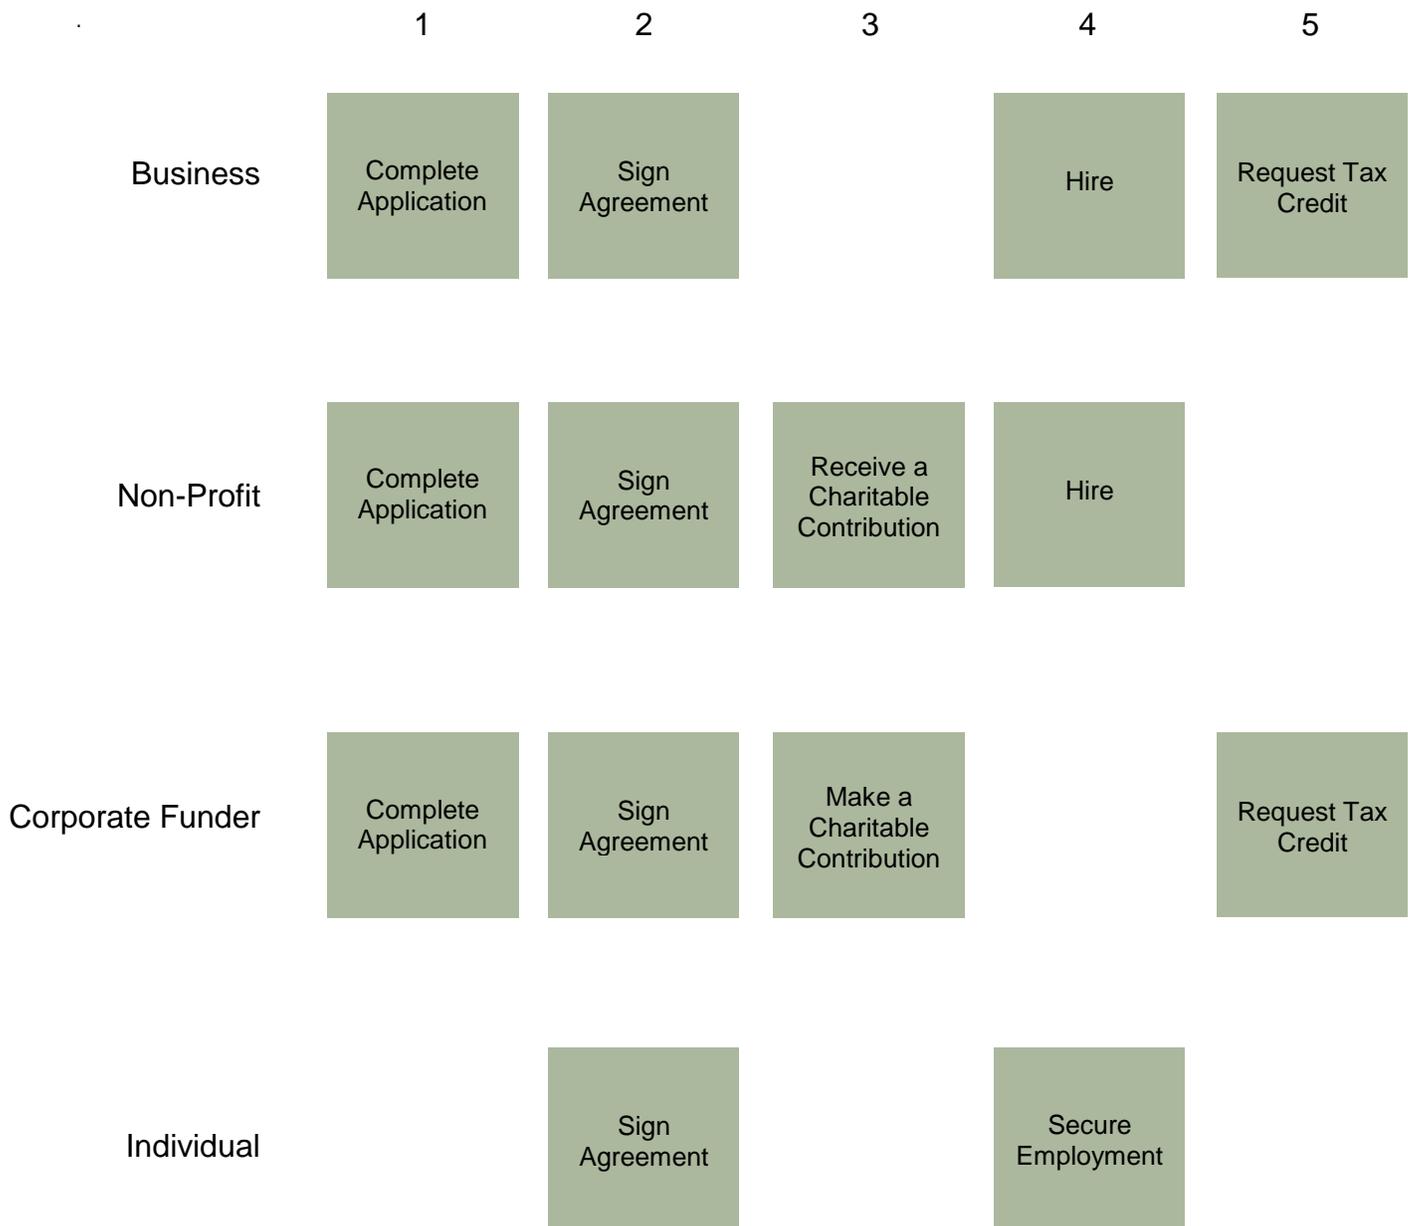

On May 20, 2010 Councilman Goode introduced a piece of legislation to make improvements to PREP. A few weeks later it passed unanimously. The new version of PREP now allows for local non-profits to participate. In addition, a mechanism now exists for corporations who make charitable contributions to non-profits that employ ex-offenders to take advantage of the tax credit available through PREP.

Please visit www.phila.gov/reentry under PREP documents to view the full Ordinance.
