

Major U.S. Cities and Counties Adopt Hiring Policies to Remove Unfair Barriers to Employment of People with Criminal Records

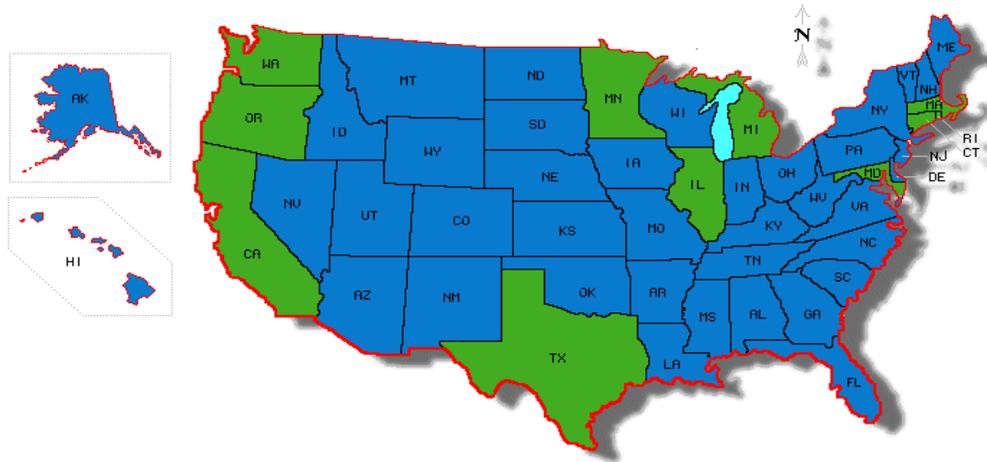

More and more urban areas across the United States are limiting discrimination in city and county jobs against people with criminal records. In the past year alone, New Haven (CT), Seattle (WA), Hartford (CT), Bridgeport (CT), and Kalamazoo (MI) have all joined the movement to ban the box. As Mayor Richard Daley explained when he announced Chicago's new hiring policy, "Implementing this new policy won't be easy, but it's the right thing to do. . . . We cannot ask private employers to consider hiring former prisoners unless the City practices what it preaches."

Coincident with increased incarceration in the United States, urban communities are absorbing growing numbers of people with criminal records who are now struggling to find work and become reintegrated into their communities. More cities are tackling this "reentry" challenge by adopting a "smart on crime" agenda which promotes public safety by creating more employment, housing and drug treatment opportunities. In the process, leading cities are re-evaluating local policies that create unnecessary barriers to employment of people with criminal records.

As summarized below, a growing number of communities have taken the critical step of removing unfair barriers to employment in their hiring policies by removing the question on their job applications regarding an individual's criminal history, deferring background checks until the later stages of the hiring process, and only performing background checks for certain positions. By opening the hiring process to emphasize current qualifications rather than past mistakes, communities open their doors to qualified individuals and reduce administrative costs.

Read below to follow the progress (in chronological order) as communities across the nation promote fairness in their hiring and employment practices.

City Hiring Policies

Boston, MA Hiring Policy and City Council Ordinance

- ☑ Banned the Box
- ☑ Background check only for otherwise qualified candidates
- ☑ Background checks only required for some positions
- ☑ Policy applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- ☑ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria
- ☑ Right to appeal denial of employment

Since 2004, the City of Boston has implemented policies that limit discrimination against people with criminal records in city government positions. In July 2006, Boston expanded those policies to require an estimated 50,000 private vendors that do business with the City to follow the same standards as used by the City. Later that year, Boston also revised its job application by removing the questions about criminal history. Significantly, the revised job application begins with an anti-discrimination statement providing applicants with notice that Boston complies with all state and federal equal employment opportunity laws, while also listing “ex-offender status” as a classification protected under the civil rights laws of the City.

For jobs with the City or a vendor that does business with the City, background checks are performed only when required by law or when the City or vendor has made a “good faith determination that the relevant position is of such sensitivity” that a background check is warranted. When required by law or a “good faith determination” of necessity, background checks are conducted only on those applicants who are found to be “otherwise qualified” for the position. This often means a background check is not conducted until a conditional offer of employment has been made. This critical protection ensures that everyone is first considered for employment based on their actual skills and experience before the City or vendor considers the age and seriousness of the crime and the “occurrences in the life of the Applicant since the crime(s).” The Boston ordinance also creates import appeals rights for those denied employment based on a criminal record and the right to present information related to the “accuracy and/or relevancy” of the criminal record.

A broad community coalition called Massachusetts Alliance to Reform CORI (MARC) supported these developments.

Chicago, IL Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only after conditional offer of employment
- Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In May 2004, Chicago Mayor Richard Daley created the Mayoral Policy Caucus on Prisoner Reentry, bringing together government and community leaders to address the challenges facing 20,000 people each year who return to Chicago after being released from prison. In January 2006, the Caucus issued a major report calling for broad reforms of City policy, including recommending that the Mayor "Adopt internal guidelines for the City of Chicago's personnel policies regarding criminal background checks, and advocate for fair employment standards."

At the same time that the report was released, Mayor Daley announced several major "reentry" initiatives, including reform of the City's hiring policies as recommended by the Caucus. The Mayor's press release described a new hiring policy requiring the City to "balance the nature and severity of the crime with other factors, such as the passage of time and evidence of rehabilitation Put more simply, this change means that City hiring will be fairer and more common sense." The Mayor added, "Implementing this new policy won't be easy, but it's the right thing to do . . . We cannot ask private employers to consider hiring former prisoners unless the City practices what it preaches."

Implementing the Mayor's new hiring policy, the Chicago Department of Human Resources has issued guidelines imposing standards on all City agencies regulating hiring decisions related to people with criminal records. For the first time, the City of Chicago now requires all agencies to take into account the age of an individual's criminal record, the seriousness of the offense, evidence of rehabilitation, and other mitigating factors before making their hiring decisions. As part of the new hiring process, the City of Chicago also revised its job application in February 2007 to remove the question about criminal history. Now, after the City makes a conditional offer of employment, the applicant fills out a screening questionnaire card that requires disclosure of any criminal record.

San Francisco, CA "Ban the Box" Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only on finalists for position
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

The campaign to "ban the box" on San Francisco's applications for public employment was led by All of Us or None, a community-based organization of formerly incarcerated people and their families. All of Us or None argued that requiring all job applicants to check a box on the initial job application indicating whether they have been "convicted by a court" unfairly discriminated against people with criminal records by discouraging them from even applying, and thus limited the hiring pool of qualified candidates for public employment. In 2005, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors approved a resolution initiated by All of Us or None calling for the City and County of San Francisco to eliminate hiring discrimination against people with criminal records by removing the request for criminal history information on the initial job application for public employment. The resolution was implemented as a municipal hiring policy, and San Francisco effectively banned the box.

Like Boston's ordinance, San Francisco's policy (which took effect in June 2006) seeks to prevent discrimination on the basis of a criminal record by removing conviction history information from the initial application. Now, many public employers can consider an individual's past convictions only after an applicant has been identified as a finalist for a position. The only exception is for those jobs where state or local laws expressly bar people with convictions from employment, in which case the City conducts its background review at an early state of the hiring process.

St. Paul, MN Mayor's Directive and City Council Resolution

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified candidates
- Background checks only required for some positions

In December 2006, Mayor Christopher Coleman of St. Paul directed the City's Human Resources Department to reform its hiring process so that "all applicants have a full and fair opportunity for employment." The City thus amended its employment application to remove questions regarding criminal history.

That same month, the City Council approved a resolution calling on the City to "make a good faith determination as to which specific positions of employment are of such sensitivity and responsibility that a background check is warranted." The resolution also mandated that background checks be performed only after an applicant is determined to be otherwise qualified for that position.

Citing a leading report issued by the Council on Crime and Justice, which includes recommendations on city hiring policies, the Mayor also called on the private sector to play a major role promoting reforms that remove unfair barriers to employment of people with criminal records.

Minneapolis, MN City Council Resolution

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background checks only required for some positions

Like St. Paul, Minneapolis passed a resolution banning the box in December 2006. The Minneapolis resolution shares many characteristics with the St. Paul resolution, including banning the box, making a “good faith” determination of which positions require background checks, and performing background checks on applicants only after they have been determined to be otherwise qualified.

The Council on Crime and Justice, with the support of more than 30 community organizations, was instrumental in getting both the St. Paul and Minneapolis resolutions passed.

Cambridge, MA Hiring Policy and City Council Ordinance

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background checks only required for some positions
- Policy applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

In May 2007, Cambridge implemented policies limiting discrimination against people with criminal records in city government positions. In January 2008, the City Council passed an ordinance extending the requirements of Cambridge’s hiring policy to private vendors that do business with the City.

Consistent with the City’s hiring policy, vendors contracting with Cambridge wait to conduct a criminal background check until the job applicant is found to be “otherwise qualified” for the position. To determine the applicant’s suitability for the position, vendors are required to consider a variety of factors, including “the relevance of the crime to the position sought,” the age and seriousness of the crime, and evidence of rehabilitation. In addition, the Cambridge ordinance requires the vendor to notify the applicant if the employer plans to make an adverse decision based on his or her criminal record. The employer must give the applicant a copy of the criminal record and the right to present information related to the accuracy and relevancy of the information reported.

Baltimore, MD Board of Estimates Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background checks only required for some positions

In December 2007, with the backing of Mayor Sheila Dixon, the City of Baltimore's Board of Estimates unanimously approved changes to the City's administrative hiring policy. The Board of Estimates – which is composed of the Mayor, President of the City Council, Comptroller, City Solicitor, and Director of Public Works – is the governing body that oversees the fiscal and administrative functions of the City. In accordance with the new policy, the City removed the criminal history question from its job application. Applicants are not asked about their criminal history on the initial application. Instead, where applicable, the applicant's criminal history is reviewed at the final stages in the hiring process.

The City also implemented a new policy to determine which positions qualified as “Positions of Trust” and thus require a background check. Employment applications for positions that are not positions of trust do not require applicants to disclose prior convictions or any other criminal history information.

Austin, TX “Ban the Box” Ordinance

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background checks only required for some positions

Following Travis County's lead, the City of Austin approved a “Ban the Box” ordinance in October 2008. The criminal background investigation questions were removed from the on-line employment application. For non safety/law enforcement jobs, criminal background investigations are required only for positions that have financial responsibility or work with children, the disabled or elderly. When the job falls in one of these categories, the background investigation is undertaken only after an applicant has been selected as the top candidate for the position. For public safety/law enforcement positions, the Austin Police Department conducts the criminal background investigation.

Berkeley, CA Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Disclosure of conviction history required only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background check only for some positions
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

In October 2008, the City of Berkeley’s Human Resources Department eliminated disclosure of conviction history information from the City’s job application at the request of City Council. According to the new procedure, Berkeley does not require disclosure of conviction history information until an applicant is selected for the position and has received a conditional offer of employment. The Human Resources Department then reviews conviction history information, which it keeps confidential within the Department. The evaluation includes “an assessment of the relationship between a conviction and the functions of the position; number of convictions; time elapsed since the conviction, evidence of rehabilitation, and any other mitigating circumstances.” The City obtains conviction history from the California Department of Justice for identified public safety, recreation, and cash-handling/asset management positions only, for all other positions, the City is to rely on the self-disclosure of the application. The new process applies to all city hires except those hired by the Police Department.

Norwich, CT Ordinance

- Banned the Box
- Background check only after a conditional offer of employment is made

In December 2008, Norwich’s City Council voted to move “Beyond the Box” and reduce barriers to employment for people with criminal records. A large group of advocates including Connecticut Pardon Team, A Better Way Foundation, Evergreen Family Oriented Tree/Clean Slate of New Haven, CABHN, Legal Assistance Resource Center and Greater Hartford Legal Aid worked together to ensure the City Council passed the ordinance, the first of its kind in Connecticut, paving the way for other cities to follow suit.

The ordinance removed the question inquiring into a person’s criminal history from the initial application for city jobs. Although the City continues to background check all employees before making a binding offer of employment, it now does so only after an applicant has been interviewed and a conditional offer of employment has been made. Once an applicant has been determined to be a finalist for a position, they will be required to provide information pertaining to any criminal convictions.

New Haven, CT Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Policy applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria
- Right to appeal denial of employment

In February 2009, the City of New Haven's Board of Alderman approved an ordinance that requires the City and its vendors wait to conduct a criminal background check until the job applicant is found to be "otherwise qualified" for the position. Under the ordinance, the City and its vendors cannot require applicants to disclose their conviction history until an applicant is selected for the position and has received a conditional offer of employment. The City's Human Resources Department then evaluates the applicant's criminal history, keeping all information confidential within the Department. The ordinance also provides applicants with a copy of their conviction history report and the opportunity to appeal adverse employment decisions based upon a past conviction within ten days of receiving notice of the decision not to hire.

Seattle, WA Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Background checks only required for some positions

In April 2009, the Personnel Director for the City of Seattle issued a memo to all department heads announcing the completion and implementation of the Citywide Personnel Rule for Criminal Background Checks. Based on the policy, Seattle does not ask job applicants about arrests or prior convictions on job applications, and limits the categories of jobs which require or allow for background checks prior to employment. In addition, an individual's past conviction history is not considered until later in the hiring process, and only for jobs falling within specific categories. The applications for jobs which require a background check include a disclaimer stating that a background check will be required. Thus, criminal background information is not required on the application.

As described in Seattle's new policy, Washington State law prohibits public agencies from refusing to hire someone or refusing to grant a license based solely on a criminal conviction. However, a person can be denied employment with a public agency or a license based on a prior felony conviction that is directly related to the employment, provided it is less than 10 years old. The background check does not consider arrests that did not result in conviction. Finally, should Seattle decide not to hire someone based on his or her conviction history, the City provides the applicant with a copy of the background report, a copy of "A Summary of Your Rights Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act," and allows the applicant ten working days to respond to proposed non-hiring action.

Providence, RI Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants

In 2008, the Mayor's Policy Office began investigating the City's hiring practices and their impact on the ability of people with criminal convictions to successfully transition back into the workforce. After hearing from Maurice Emsellem, Policy Co-Director of NELP, and HR representatives from three cities that had already successfully "banned the box," the group of stakeholders agreed to change Providence's hiring policies.

In April 2009, the HR department removed the language relating to information on criminal charges from its online and paper application. In addition, the applicant only signs a waiver for a background check once it has been determined that the candidate satisfies the minimum criteria for the position based on qualifications and ability.

Hartford, CT City and Vendor Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only after conditional offer of employment
- Background checks only required for some positions
- Policy applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

In May 2009, Hartford's City Council recognized that barriers to employment for people with criminal records "creat[e] permanent members of an underclass that threatens the health of the community and undermines public safety." In response, the City Council passed an ordinance to change the hiring policy of the City and its vendors, and to "assist the successful reintegration of formerly-incarcerated people back into the community by removing barriers to gainful employment after their release from prison." While the ordinance has not yet been implemented, it offers important protections to workers, including prohibiting the consideration of arrests that did not lead to conviction; delaying background checks in the hiring process; limiting background checks to specific positions; and providing applicants the opportunity to appeal adverse employment decisions.

Worcester, MA City and Vendor Hiring Ordinance

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified candidates
- Background checks only required for some positions
- Policy applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria
- Right to appeal denial of employment

In June 2009, Worcester's City Council passed the Fair CORI Practices Ordinance. This ordinance applies to "all persons and businesses supplying goods and / or services to the city of Worcester" and is intended to ensure "fair policies and practices in screening, hiring, and retaining persons with criminal histories." Per the policy, public employers and vendors who do business with the City are prohibited from inquiring into an applicant's criminal history on any initial employment application, and may only perform a background check once an applicant is identified as otherwise qualified. Importantly, background checks may only be performed when mandated by law, or when the city or vendor "determines that the position in question is of such sensitivity" that a review of the applicant's criminal history is warranted. Worcester's comprehensive law also requires that the person reviewing the background report be trained to do so, and that they apply a list of factors to be considered. Finally, applicants are provided with a complaint procedure if an adverse decision is made on the basis of their criminal history.

Bridgeport, CT Civil Service Rules

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- Right to appeal denial of employment
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

In October 2009, Bridgeport's City Council ratified changes to the City's civil service rules regarding criminal history investigations of applicants. Under the new rules, the Personnel Director will seek information about applicants' criminal histories only after the applicant has been found "otherwise eligible" to take the civil service examination. The initial employment application includes a disclaimer that criminal history information will be sought later in the application or examination process.

In addition to considering the criminal histories of applicants later in the hiring process, the new rules require the Personnel Director to consider the following factors when making an employment decision based on a person's criminal history: "the nature and seriousness of the offense; time elapsed since the conviction; age when convicted; the degree to which the conviction is related to the duties and responsibilities of the job and the bearing the conviction has on the applicants' fitness and ability to perform such duties and responsibilities; evidence of rehabilitation and the interest of the City in protecting property and the welfare and safety of public and employees." Candidates who are disqualified because of their criminal record have the right to appeal the Personnel Director's decision to the Civil Service Commission. The Commission has the authority to "grant the appellant such relief as the Commission deems appropriate or to deny the appeal."

Kalamazoo, MI Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box

In January 2010 Kalamazoo became the first city to ban the box in the new year. The city manager announced that the city would no longer ask about prior criminal history on its applications for employment. This decision came after months of pressure from a newly formed coalition, spearheaded by the Community Workers Center of Kalamazoo and convened by the Michigan Organizing Project. Members of the coalition will continue to demand similar changes from other local units of government and eventually from the private sector.

County Hiring Policies

County of Alameda (Oakland, CA area) Pilot Program

- Banned the Box
- Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants

In October 2006, the Alameda County Board of Supervisors unanimously adopted a resolution urging the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Human Resources to implement a "pilot project, revising the means and timing of when applicants are required to disclose past criminal history records upon the application for public employment in the County of Alameda in order to mitigate or eliminate the negative impact against individuals who have been incarcerated or otherwise have criminal convictions to assist with the successful reintegration into the community."

Under the pilot program, which began in April 2007, Alameda County removed the question on the job application that required all applicants to list their criminal convictions. Modeled after the San Francisco policy, the criminal history inquiry now takes place later in the hiring process. In addition, to protect against potential discrimination a special unit in the Human Resources Department performs an analysis to determine if the conviction is, in fact, related to the specific functions of the job.

County of Multnomah (Portland, OR area) Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Incorporates EEOC language in selection criteria

In October 2007, Multnomah County removed the question about criminal history from both on-line and hard-copy applications. The Multnomah County policy is similar to the policy implemented in the City and County of San Francisco. The Portland-based group, Partnership for Safety and Justice, was instrumental in the adoption of the new county hiring policy as part of their "Think Outside of the Box" campaign.

When an applicant's criminal history is considered, at a later stage of the hiring process, the Multnomah County policy requires an individualized determination of whether the conviction bears a rational relationship to the job. According to the policy, important factors to consider include the nature of the crime for which the applicant was convicted; any positive changes demonstrated since the conviction; the age at time of arrest; and the amount of time that has elapsed since the arrest occurred.

County of Travis (Austin, TX area) Hiring Policy

- Banned the Box
- Background check only after applicant selected
- Background checks only required for some positions
- Includes EEOC language in selection criteria

In April 2008, acting upon the recommendation of Justice and Public Safety and the Director of Human Resources for Travis County, the Travis County Commissioner's Court voted to remove the question about an applicant's criminal history from county job applications. The Travis County Reentry Roundtable Report, which was completed in 2007, recommended changes to the county's hiring practice as a key way to increase employment opportunities for people reentering the community.

In order to foster better integration of people with criminal records into the county workforce, the Human Resources Department trains hiring managers to consider "circumstances such as length of time since offense, seriousness of the offense, frequency of criminal incidents, and other mitigating factors." Additional training assists all new employees, including people with criminal records, in adapting to the workplace environment. Also significant, the Human Resources Department is developing a brochure highlighting the new county hiring guidelines to distribute at job fairs and other recruiting events.

Proposed City and County Hiring Policies

County and City of Los Angeles, CA

There are separate measures pending before the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors and the Los Angeles City Council to review their hiring policies related to people with criminal records. On May 23, 2006, the Los Angeles City Council debated a resolution (click here) sponsored by Councilwoman Jan Perry, which resulted in a decision by the Council to order a study of hiring practices by the Los Angeles Department of Human Resources.

On February 26, 2007, following a complete review of the City's hiring practices, the City of Los Angeles' Personnel Department made a recommendation to the Los Angeles City Council to remove the criminal history question from the job application. The Personnel Department's report (click here) determined that the "removal of the conviction history question...will not prevent the City from meeting its responsibility to citizens and employees." The report specifically recommends that review and evaluation of a candidate's criminal history occur "later in the selection process, when the candidate is being considered for appointment."

On November 22, 2006, the Los Angeles Board of Supervisors held a hearing on a motion (click here) sponsored by Supervisor Yvonne Burke, which featured supporting testimony from Congresswoman Maxine Waters, other prominent community leaders, grassroots organizations, and people with criminal records seeking work. The measure was never voted out of the Board of Supervisors.

Newark, NJ

On July 10, 2006, Newark's newly elected Mayor, Cory A. Booker, released his 100-day plan which prominently featured a "prisoner re-entry initiative" to "reduce legal restrictions in municipal hiring and contracting for residents with criminal records, where appropriate." The initiative would authorize criminal background checks "only after an individual is determined to be otherwise qualified for a position for which certain kinds of convictions are deemed relevant."

City & County of Philadelphia, PA

The Philadelphia City Council is considering a bill (click here) that will change the hiring practices of City government and City contractors. The bill will remove the question about criminal history from the job application. In addition, similar to the Boston ordinance, the bill requires "covered employers to make a good faith determination of whether a criminal background check is needed for a particular job." Further, when a criminal background check is completed and may lead to disqualification of the applicant, the applicant must be given a copy of the criminal record report considered and five business days to correct any inaccuracies. The bill also prohibits covered employers from inquiring about arrests that do not lead to a conviction. A hearing on the bill was held in November 2007, and the bill is still pending. (Click here for hearing testimony, prepared by Sharon Dietrich of Community Legal Services in Philadelphia.)

Oakland, CA

In March 2007, Oakland's newly elected Mayor Ron Dellums announced an effort to alter the City of Oakland's job application form to remove questions about past criminal histories. Mayor Dellums included the proposal in his agenda to find "new and creative" ways to address violent crime in Oakland. All of Us or None, a local community organization, is working with the City to implement the Mayor's plan.

Article by Jessica S. Henry and James B. Jacobs, published in Criminology and Public Policy, Vol. 6 No. 4, 2007, pp 755-762. Henry and Jacobs examine the movement to "ban the box," discuss the changes made by specific cities, pose questions about the effectiveness of the changes, and conclude that the "ban the box" is a smart societal investment.

"Cities Adopt Hiring Policies to Facilitate Prisoner Reentry" (May 22, 2006)

"Major cities, including Boston, Chicago and San Francisco, have recently adopted new hiring policies that would reduce barriers to municipal employment for former prisoners. While former offenders would still be kept out of certain occupations, the policies align with a new public safety agenda in which cities are creating opportunities for employment, housing and drug treatment to reduce recidivism. By focusing on crime prevention, this 'smart on crime' approach responds to the disproportionate number of former offenders re-entering society through large U.S. cities. Polls show widespread support across America for rehabilitation as a public safety strategy."

"Cities That Lead the Way" (March 31, 2006)

"Three cities -- Boston, Chicago and San Francisco - have taken groundbreaking steps aimed at de-emphasizing criminal histories for qualified applicants for city jobs, except in law enforcement, education and other sensitive areas where people with convictions are specifically barred by statute. . . . Taken together, the recent developments in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco symbolize a step forward in terms of fairness for law-abiding ex-offenders, who are often barred from entire occupations because of youthful mistakes and minor crimes committed in the distant past."

"Twin Cities Adopt Smart Job Stances: Effort is to Help Stop Revolving Prison Door" (January 2, 2007)

"As anyone who's spent time searching the Internet knows, background checks for criminal records are easier than ever to conduct; it's understandable that companies increasingly use them to pare job seekers. Nevertheless, a countervailing big-city trend has found its way to Minneapolis and St. Paul, and it deserves both explanation and praise. Both cities took steps in December to remove from initial job application forms the box requiring disclosure of a criminal record."

"Dellums Wants to Offer Oakland Jobs to Ex-Cons" (March 6, 2007)

"In one of Dellums' first public pronouncements since taking office in January, he told a group of Oakland hills residents last week that he plans to direct the city council to consider altering the application form for some city jobs to avoid questions about past criminal histories."

"La Vigne: Aid Reintegration of Ex-prisoners" (April 26, 2008)

"Travis County commissioners made a heroic move this week, opening the doors to thousands of former prisoners who have hit a brick wall when seeking employment. The barrier? That little box on a county job application that asks if the applicant has been convicted of a crime. The banning of that box, a seemingly small gesture, will speak volumes to those trying to lead productive, law-abiding lives after spending time behind bars and to local lawmakers throughout the nation."

"Norwich City Council sets state precedent with Beyond the Box" (December 5, 2008)

"Norwich City Council members set a precedent for the state on Monday, Dec. 1, when they voted unanimously to approve an ordinance that would eliminate the check box asking about a criminal background from applicants for city jobs. Hartford, Waterbury, and Bridgeport are all considering similar moves, but Norwich is the first city to actually take action."

“‘Ban the Box’ Gets Thumbs Up” (February 4, 2009)

“Anderson was one of almost two dozen people who testified Tuesday night in favor of the proposal presented by Community Services Administrator Kica Matos. It would require all city departments and private companies doing business with the city to remove the box from job applications, unless they get a waiver. The point of the proposal is to help level the playing field for ex-offenders.”

“New Haven May Ease Hiring of Ex-Criminals” (February 13, 2009)

“If the proposal is approved, New Haven will join other cities, including San Francisco, Baltimore and Minneapolis, that have voted to remove the question [regarding criminal history] on their job applications. Proponents of the move say that people who have done their time deserve jobs, too, and the current job application question usually means they are dismissed out of hand no matter what their skills.”

“Aldermen vote to ‘ban the box’” (February 18, 2009)

“‘Ban the box’ ordinance promotes equal opportunities, public safety” (March 5, 2009)

“In February, the New Haven Board of Aldermen passed a ‘ban the box’ ordinance, aimed at ensuring that individuals will not be uniformly and unfairly denied legitimate employment opportunities on the basis of past criminal convictions.”

“Ban the Box, Hire Fairly” (January 27, 2010)

“In 2008, approximately 12,500 citizens returned from prison to the communities of Michigan. Within two years, nearly half of them will return to prison. And research by the Justice Policy Center at The Urban Institute has shown that a principal factor in such high recidivism is a lack of employment opportunities. It is not a lack of adequate qualifications, but rather the social stigma surrounding a felony conviction that prevents many ex-prisoners from landing a job . . . One way to ensure a fair shot is to prohibit discrimination based on criminal history - by banning the box on application forms that requires applicants to check it if they have been convicted of a crime.”
